How many times have we, as adults, longed to be a carefree infant again? Maybe if we could remember some of our earliest experiences, we may change our minds or at least have a litor minds or at least have a lit-tle more understanding of our children. Close your eyes and pretend you are a baby. For the first six months of your life, you have been getting all your nourishment by sucking on a nipple, and you do it rather well. Sucking is something that you practiced in the womb, could do at birth and have been doing every since and you like it, you are a natural, and life has been a pleasant procession of liquids expertly extracted, until today.

of liquids expertly extracted, until today. Today, your mother has put you in an infant seat and is waving a silver spoon with enthusiasm and a big smile, cooing. On the spoon is a heaping mound of white goo. Mom seems to think this is very exciting. The goo comes closer and closer and then plop, she showes it into your mouth. Your mouth, eyes and everything you have in your body says, Acchli What is this? and then you gag. How are you supposed to suck that stuff? You spit the goo out and clamp your jaws shut. Feeding time is definitely over for now. Although Mom might be alarmed because you gagged on your first bite of solid food, a certain amount of gagging is normal when a baby starts to eat. Eating is a learned process. With the sucking reflex, babies bring their tongues to the front of the mouth and then up towards the palate. They may take 10-20 sucks, and then take a big swallow. With solid foods, though, the tongue needs to wing the food to the back of the mouth, the opposite of wh has been natural for s months.

Learning to swallow solid foods is not an easy task for a baby. During the learning process, he may gag if food starts heading towards his airway rather than towards his stomach. "If your child is gagging a little while seating, he may not have reached the stage in his development where he's ready for the experience," says ready for the experience," says philip Colaizzo, M.D. The right philip Colaizzo, M.D. The right time to introduce your child to solids is when he can sit up fairly well by himself. "Rice creal is an ideal first food because kids are seldom aller-gic to it, and it can be made very diluted by mixing it with extra milk," says Dr. Colaizzo. The main nutrition should come from breast milk or formula. When your child opens his mouth, place a pea sized portion of food on the front of the tongue. A large amount of food is harder to deal with, and if you drop it towards the back of the mouth, your child is much more likely to gas-on it. At first you want to keep the problem taken care of.

For three years or more I've had the same post office box. To this day, I still get a lot of mail that is not mine. I have complained to the post office, but it hasn't seemed to help. As much money and hourly pay as those people get they could take the time to take care of my preblem. I should not have to write on the bill or to the people who sent this mail out to my box. I guess-the best thing to do is drop the box. then the problem would be over.

If the mail does not have my name on it, I wish the post office would stop putting it in my box."

Belle Glade Postmaster Johnny W. Johnson responds: First of all, I apologize to any of our customers who encountered a problem with our services. Although I cannot personally respond to this customer in that he or she is not identified, I will be more than glad to meet with him or her in my office at his or her convenience in order to give an answer to help solve this problem. Again, to all of our fine postal customers I say, together we can find the solution.

New research shows that females can succeed in math as well as males...or better research by Suzainne Austin, Ph.D., professor of mathematics at Miami-Dade. Community

Traditionally, while male and female students the seventh or eignin grade, and later seit-select out of careers that are math intensive. Austin believes that a technique called transactional writing can help women and girls break the "math ceiling." For the past year, she has directed a research study, funded by the National Science Foundation: Experimental Projects for Women and Girls, tesing words to help students understand mathematical concepts and lose their math anxiety.

In the project's first annual report to the NSF, results are exceeding expectations. On the remedial college level, both male and female students' attitudes toward math improved, meaning that their fear of math and their stress over exams were significantly reduced. Female students made the transition even faster. The students' addenic success in math also was significantly improved. Students in the test group were more likely to achieve a grade of "S' (Satisfactory) after only one semester and were able to move on to college level studies. Stu-dents in the control group tended to repeat the same subject for two or three consecutive semesters before advancing to another level. At the middle school level, attitude and achievement results paralleled those at the col-lege level. However, there were some additional factors at the middle schools which made their results even more improseries. results even more impressive.

The middle school classes involved in the research ranged from low achieving to gifted students, from low to high socio-economic sta-tus, and represented a broad spectrum of ethnic groups. Some students were from a magnet chool, others participated in a new type of school, others participated in a new type of block scheduling, and some were from traditional middle schools. Some students in the test group were such low achievers that they could barely spell or write a complete sentence. Surprisingly, this group shows the most progress.

For the most part, (they) were negative about both writing and math, and had little or no interest in grades, said Carol Roisman, mathematics teacher at Southwood Middle School.

Many sat bewildered and frustrated. Others flat out refused to write. Slowly, very slowly,

"Many sat bewildered and frustrated. Others flat out refused to write. Slowly, very slowly, changes began to appear; less resistance, a marked use of mathematical terminology - trying to be more creative in their writing, and others, who before had refused to write, were actually putting pencil to paper."

Thad one male student, who could not even put together a phrase in the beginning of the school year, write two good sentences - about math! One of my female students is now submitting pages of writing, earning grades above C. Previously, this student was very much against writing in her math class, was earning rear failing grades."

On the other hand, the gifted students adapted so well to the program that they often wrote

d so well to the program that they often wrote

ed so well to the program that they often wrote six and eight page answers to the questions. It is important to note that all the measures for achievement and attitude were obtained through the use of professionally respected standardized tests, such as the Stanford Achievement Test and Alken's Revised Mathematics Attitude Scale.

These results are helping to prove that the issue of females being able to succeed in mathematics was never an issue of capability but rather an issue of attitude and opportunity," Austin added.

Austin added.

Nearly 1,000 students, both male and female, rom th Neary 1,000 students, both male and female, om three middle schools and one college par-cipated in the first year of the study. When the roject is complete in the year 2000, Austin opes to publish a teacher's manual which can a used by teachers across the country.

15% Rate rollback for Florida homeowners

..Staff Reporter

By Bill Nelson rida Treasurer and Insurance Commissioner

The big news in Florida in the summer of 1992 was Hurricane Andrew. Beyond the tragic sos of life, Andrew caused more economic damage than all of the previous major storms comined: $25 billion and still climbing. Insurance sasse sexceeded $16 billion.

bined: $25 billion and still climbing. Insurance losses exceeded $16 billion. Before that monster storm, Florida had one of the most active and competitive property insurance markets in the nation. But since Andrew, the property insurance market in many parts of the state, especially south Florida, has been paralyzed. Fearing the next big one, insurance companies developed an insatiable appetite for higher and higher rates.

Over the past three years that I've been in office, I've worked closely with your legislators to rebuild the homeowners insurance market devastated by Andrew — to keep insurance available and affordable. Today, we have a special tax-exempt trust fund that could cover 85 percent of the residential losses of another Andrew-size storm. And the two largest insurances of Florida homes have agreed to freeze their rates.

With this progress, Florida stands at a crossroads today. We can finish the job of rebuilding the insurance market and give consumers the relief and protections they need. Or we can stand back and allow the industry to maintain its tight grip on homeowners.

The choice is an easy one. That's what my top legislative priority for 1998 is all about.

I am requesting that you contact your legisla-tors and urge them to enact the "Homeowners" Protection Act' during the annual two month lawmaking session that began March 3. It's my hope that the Legislature will work responsibly on this comprehensive plan. In broad outline, the legislation would:

• Roll back your homeowner insurance rates

*Moll back your homeowner insurance rates by 15 percent;
• Give you, the loyal policyholders, protection against unfair cancellation;
• Allow those of you who move within the state to take your insurance with you;
• Assure you of full premium discounts for safeguards like storm shutters;
• Reduce extra charges you as policyholders

• Assure you of rull premium discounts for safeguards like storm shutters;
• Reduce extra charges you as policyholders might face from the mega-storm;
• Require insurance companies to write more policies; and
• Put rate decisions back in the hands of the elected commissioner, instead of an industry dominated arbitration panel.

The 'Homewomers Protection Act' would eliminate the need for residential coverage by the State's insure of last resort, known as the JUA, and allow companies to buy cheaper reinsurance from the state's disaster fund, thereby reducing costs for the consumer and resulting in the 15 percent reduction in rates.

I look forward to hearing from you in the weeks ahead on these final steps needed to return competition to Florida's homeowners insurance market and give you the rate relief you deserve. I hope you will help me convince the Legislature to enact them into law.

Glades Afro Arts Festival celebrates African-American Heritage

Glades Afro Arts Festival starts with gospel sing, ends with daylong celebration

The annual Glades Afro Arts Festival began March 19 with a gospel explosion and ended Saturday evening with food, dancing and children's activities at Lake Shore Park.

 Shirley Morris, who organized the Gospel Explosion, said she was grateful for all who participated in the first Gospel Explosion. Proceeds benefited the McKnight Achiever Scholarship

• McKnight Achiever Scholarship Fund and the Euphinea Morris Memorial Scholarship Fund.

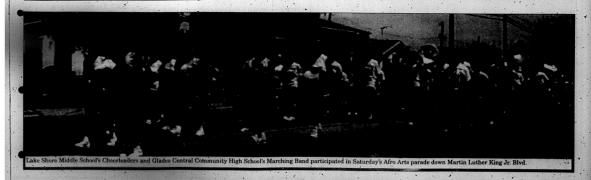

A street and community clean up and adopt-a-highway was held on March 16 and a health fair on March 17 as part of the festivities. A prayer service was also held as part of Afro Arts Fest on March 18 at New Bethel Missionary Baptist
